Research
Unnatural positions are a risk factor for the development of physical symptoms in the wrist and forearm. (sources include: Karlqvist 1994, Jensen 1998, Haberg 1994). When the mouse is located closer to the body, this results in less strain on the neck and shoulders (Armstrom 1995, Cook 1998). The use of a trackball and touchpad reduces productivity; standard mice and pen tablets score high for productivity.
